is ontite evident from a careful perusal and analysis of a summary of the report, since this leads numerically all other "offences" at protected crossings.

Out of a list of 24 forms of dangerous practices observed at protected crossings across the Dominion, with a total of 346 cases cited, no less than 140, or 40.7 of the total are listed under the caption "Crossed in front of approaching train", despite the fact that some form of warning signal was in operation at the time.

How desperately anxious many motorists are to get across the tracks ahead of the oncoming train is illustrated in the statement that of the 346 cases recorded a total of 42, or 12.1 per cent. of the total drove under the gates while being lowered, and even the fact that gates were actually down to bar the way, did not deter 31 drivers or 8.9 per cent. of the total or oven under the gates while heing lowered and even the fact that gates were actually down to bar the way, did not deter 31 drivers or 8.9 per cent. of the total or oven under the adoling course and crashing through and damaging the gates.

incidents observed on widely separated dates at our crossing areas in a characteristic and this is one of the crossings fully equipped with all the usual automatic signalling devices.

Even a hasty glance at the report leaves one wondering whether such safety devices are of any value at all, in view of the persistency with which they are ignored to the danger, not only of the driver of the car or truck concerned, but too often to the peril of passengers as well.

The appearance of railway trucks at crossings shead, whether protected or not, should instantly inspire an urge to exercise caution in the minds of all drivers, knowing as they must do, the inscorableness of a heavy railway train being hauled by a steam or electrically driven locomotive. Instead of that, however, it serves to promote in many a desire to experience the thrill of flirting with death by trying to "beat the train to the crossing" and apparently the closer the shave the better.

It is difficult to know what to do to curb the insanity of such drivers, except perhaps to check up on them at some of these crossings and in every case of such wild bravado to suspend their licenses for a first offence and to cancel them entirely the second time they are caught.
